ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank Prof. Sophie De Winne (KU Leuven, Belgium) and Prof. Elise Marescaux (IESEG School of Management, France) for their valuable discussions on HR differentiation, which inspired me to write this paper. My special thanks go to Ms Marta Grzesiak, who helped in the literature review as the second assessor of the analysed articles. I am also grateful to the participants of the Department of Labour and Social Policy (Poznań University of Economics and Business, Poland) meeting held on 16.11.2022 and Prof. Eve Saint-Germes for her comments on the earlier version of this article. The help of Ms Eliza Antkowiak (The Main Library of Poznań University of Economics and Business, Poland) and Dr Krzysztof Durczak (Department of Sociology and Business Ethics, Poznań University of Economics and Business, Poland) was also essential.
