

To contributors to the 2025 issues

The year 2025 brought continued use of ScholarOne at <https://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/immunohematology> for our manuscript submission and peer review processes. Peer reviewers, upon registering on our ScholarOne site, can now select areas of expertise that can then be used to match key words in the submitted manuscript with reviewers with expertise in the same topic area as the manuscript. Sciendo/DeGruyter, the company that manages our subscriptions and online access, has transitioned to a new company, Paradigm, moving our journal to <https://reference-global.com/journal/IMMUNOHEMATOLOGY>. The previous Sciendo/DeGruyter site, <https://sciendo.com/journal/IMMUNOHEMATOLOGY>, will continue to function, routing readers to the new Paradigm site for several months before the old URL is removed. Changes were made to our home page on the Paradigm site, including the ability of readers to directly subscribe and pay via the home page with a credit card via Stripe. Also, subscriptions will transition to calendar-year (CY) timeframes with new subscribers who register mid-year being given special compensation to align their subscription with the CY timeframe. Corinne Goldberg, one of our medical associate editors, stepped down in 2025, and Barry Siegfried assumed the open position. We welcome Dr. Siegfried to our team!

Immunohematology, again, published 4 issues with online access and printed copies per subscription orders. And again, this continuation of our publishing process would not have been possible without the continued efforts of our Immunohematology team!

Immunohematology depends on many contributors to make each issue a success: authors who submit reviews, scientific reports, case reports, blood group allele information, book reviews, and letters to the editors; peer reviewers who review each submission for accuracy and completeness of content; associate editors who oversee each submission for medical/technical content and appropriateness for publication; technical editors who ensure that the technical aspects of each submission are correct; and the copy editor, proofreader, and electronic publisher who format each issue to ensure that it is aesthetically pleasing to the eye of the reader. Each submission is managed by the managing editor, who moves the manuscripts through the review/editing process and who finalizes each for publication. The entire process is overseen by the editor-in-chief. Behind the scenes is our production assistant who processes and manages subscriptions, invoices, and payments; replies to emails in our immuno@redcross.org mailbox; and performs various other duties that keep the journal on track. In addition, our prestigious editorial board members submit manuscripts and provide peer reviews, guidance in policy, ideas for focused issues, and suggestions for improvement of the journal. Without these contributors, Immunohematology would not exist. We appreciate the time and effort each contributes to the journal.

The authors are showcased in their publications. The editorial staff, production assistant, medical and technical editors, and current members of the editorial board are listed in the masthead of each issue of the journal along with the copy editor, proofreader, and electronic publisher: our sincerest appreciation to each.

Our peer reviewers did an excellent job again this year. We take this opportunity to list each by name below with heartfelt gratitude to each.
