

zonal currents in low latitudes needs some amplification.

In the 1949-paper referred to above I have already pointed out the great importance of the upper tropospheric currents in equatorial regions for the "steering" of weather also in middle latitudes. It is to be hoped that an increased number of stations for systematic observations soon may be organized in the tropics.

Very truly yours

Mario Bossolasco

Milano June 6th, 1950.

CORRIGENDUM

February issue of Tellus 1950, H. Riehl: "On the Role of the Tropics in the General Circulation of the Atmosphere."

The author has advised that unfortunately figs. 2 and 13 have been reversed and so have figs. 10 and 11.